The Union Buildings

South Africa's Union Buildings, the official seat of the national government, houses the offices of the president and is located in Pretoria. They are a South African national monument. The lush gardens surrounding the buildings are a popular picnic venue, and the structure itself is considered an architectural masterpiece.

The attractively terraced gardens are a reminder of South Africa's past, playing backdrop to various monuments, including one of General Louis Botha, the first prime minister of the Union of South Africa, and the South African Police Memorial. The Union Buildings are also synonymous with South African's transition to democracy, with images of the inauguration of South Africa's first democratically elected president, Nelson Mandela, beamed around the world.

The Freedom Park Museum – a heritage destination

Freedom Park is a 52ha heritage precinct located in Salvokop, Tshwane (Pretoria). It is a site of remembrance where South Africa honours those who sacrificed their lives in the struggle for freedom. Freedom Park does not honour those who died in a specific conflict or in support of a political ideology; it pays tribute to all deserving South Africans who played a meaningful role in shaping this nation.

Although no remains are kept at Freedom Park, there are some symbols that represent the heroes of South Africa's past struggles. The 697metre long Wall of Names is inscribed with names of some of those who died in past conflicts. The wall has space for 136 000 names and more than 75 000 have been listed since 2007.

The Garden of Remembrance is a tranquil space for reflection and prayer, combined with monuments, statues and sculptures. Everyone who contributed to the Freedom of the country is acknowledged in the garden

Construction of the garden begun in July 2003 and it was completed in March 2004. This marked the first decade of democracy in South Africa.

The Hapo Museum located within Freedom Park draws its name from the Khoi word meaning 'dream' and tells the story of Africa and of South Africa in a seven parts called Epochs. The seven part of the story are Earth, Ancestors, Peopling, Resistance and Colonisation, Industrialisation and Urbanisation, Nationalism and Struggle, National Building and Continent Building. The Hapo Museum also explores the great questions – who am I and why am I here? What comes before and after death?

Open seven days a week, from 08:00am until 16:30pm.

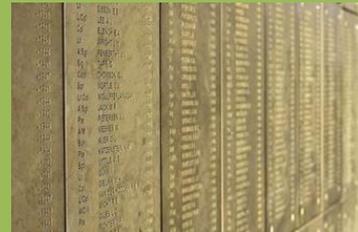

Admission prices:

- To visit both //hapo and the Garden of Remembrance is R90
- To visit //hapo only is R60
- To visit the Garden of Remembrance only is R45
